THE MAID SERVANT.—Holidays being looked forward to with unmixed delight by all those whose opportunity of enjoying them are dependent upon others, a sketch of character at such season may amuse those whose inclination is not sufficiently strong to study the original, and just enough to feel pleasure in looking at the picture. The outline and finishing of that which is here exhibited, prove it the production of a master hand.

The maid servant must 'e considered as young, or else she has married the butcher, the butler, or her of a master hand.

The maid servant must'e considered as young, or else she has married the butcher, the butler, or her cousin, or has otherwise settled into a character distinct from her original one, so as to become what is properly called the domestic. The maid servant, in her apparel, is either slovenly or fine by turas, and dirty always; or she is at all times snug and neat, and dressed according to her station. In the latter case her ordinary dress is black stockings, a stuff gown, a cap, and neck handkerchief pinned cornerwise behind. If you want a pin she just feels about her, and has always one to give you. On Sundays and holidays, and perhaps of afternoons, she changes her black stockings for white, puts on a gown of better texture and finer pattern, sets her cap and curis jauntily, and lays aside the neck handkerchief for a high body, which, by the way, is not half so pretty. There is something very warm and latent in the handkerchief—something easy, vital and genial. A woman in a high bodied gown, made to fit her like a case, is by no means more modest, and is much less tempting. She looks like the figure at the head of a ship. We could almost see her chucked out of doors into a cart with as little remorse as a couple of sugar loaves. The tucker is much better, as well as the handkerchief; and is to the other, what the young lady is to the servant. The one reminds us of the Sparkler in the 'Guardian'—the other of Fanny in 'Joseph Andrews.'

But to return: The general furniture of her ordinary reom, the kitchen is not so much her own as her master's and mistress', and need not be described:

But to return: The general furniture of her ordinary from, the kitchen is no: so much her own as her room, the kitchen is no: so much her own as her room, the kitchen is no: so much her own as her room, the kitchen is no: so much her own as her room, the kitchen is no: so much her own as her room, the kitchen is no: so much her own as her room, the kitchen is no: so much her own as her room, the kitchen is no: so much her own as her room, the kitchen is no: so much her own as her room, the kitchen is no: so much her own as her room, the kitchen is no: so much her own as her of the some of her property, such as a brass thimble, a part of scissors, a thread case, a piece of wax candle wriskled with the thread, and ode volume of 'Pamela, and perhaps a sixpenny play, such as 'George Barn-well,' or Mrs. Schn's 'Orononko'. There is a piece or looking glass also in the window. The such property such as 'George Barn-well,' or Mrs. Schn's 'Orononko'. There is a piece or looking glass also in the window. Thus passed the mornings, between working and singing, and giggling, and grumbling, and being flattered. If she takes pleasure unconnected with heroffice before the afternoon, it is when she runs up the area steps, or to the door to hear and purchase a new song, or to see a troop of soldiers go by; or when she happens to thrust her head out of a chamber window with a servant of the next house, when dialogue infallibly ensues, stimulated by the imaginary obstacles between. If the maid servant is wise, the best work is done by dinner time; and nothing else is necessary to give perfect zest to the meal. She tells us what she thinks of it, when she calls it a 'bit o' a dinner.'—There is the same sort of cloquence in her other phrase, 'a cup o' tea'; but the old ones, ond the washer woman beat her at that. After tea in great houses, she goes with the other servants to hot-cockles, or What-are my-thoughts-like, and tells Mr. John to 'have done them;' or if there is a ball given that night, they throw them; or if there is a ball given that night, they throw open all the doors, and make use of the music up stairs to dance by. In smaller houses she receives the visits of her aforesaid cousin; and sits down alone, or with a ef her aforesuid cousin; and sits down alone, or with a fellow maid servant, to work: talks of her young master or mistress, Mr. Ivins; (Evans) or else she calls to mind her own friends in the country, where she thinks the cows and 'all that,' beaut ful now she is away.— Meanwhile, if she is lazy, she spuffs the candle with her scissors; and if she has caten more heartity than usual, she sighs double the number of times, and thinks that tender hearts are born to be unhappy. Such being the maid-servant's life in doors, she scorns when abroad, to be any thing but a creature of scorns when abroad, to be any thing but a creature of sheer enjoyment.—The maid servant, the sailor, and the schoolboy, are the three beings that enjoy a holi-day beyond all the rest of the world; and for the same reason, because their experience, seculiarity of life, and habit of being with persons or circumstances, or thoughts above them, give them all, in their way, a cast of the romantic. The most active of money-getters is a vegetable compared with them. The maid-servant, when she first goes to Vauxhall, thinks she is in heaven. A theatre is all pleasure to her, whatever is going forward, whether the play or the music. or the waiting which makes others impatient, or the munching of apples and gingerbread nuts, which she and her party commence almost as soon as they have seated themselves. She prefers tragedy to comedy, because it is grander, and less like what she meets with in general, and because she thinks it more in fine people coming out of court, and the "beasties" in the town, and at all events she has been to Astley's and the circus, from which she comes away equally smitt n with the rider, and sore with laughing at the clown. But it is difficult to say what pleasure she enjoys most. One of the completest of all is the fair, where she walks through an endless round of noise, and toys, and gallant apprentices, and wonders. Here she is invited in by courteous, well dressed people, as if she were the mistress. Here also is the conjurer's booth, where the operator kinnself, a most stately and genteel person, all the while calls her "ma'am," and says to John by her side, in spite of his laced hat, "be good enough, sir, to hand the card to the lady." Ah! may her consin turn out as true as he says he is; or may she get home soon enough, and smiling enough, to be as happy again next time.

Susmarine Pedestrianism —This is certainly the "patent age of new inventions." Ballooning is a mere bubble, like those which children blow, compared with what recent times have produced. The last new project of the prodigious kind—not walking on the water, but under it—perambulating the bottom of the sea travelling by land from England to America, exploring the Mediterranean on fool! This is a novelty it must be owned. We owe the idea of it (the thing has not yet been actually done, though nothing now remains but simply to do it) to a wonderful diver of Naples, named Lorenzo Giordano, a native of Fiumary, in Calabria. He is able to remain six hours under the water, in the deepest places, and to walk at the bottom at the rate of a mile an hour. He has requested permission to be privileged for two years, and to have a third of all he may find in his marine peregrinations. Well, we shall see; or rather we shall not; for his perambulations will be performed out of sight, and we must therefore take his word about the walking. His stipulation that he is to have no more than a third of what he may meet with, is sensible enough; a third of the bite of a shark ought to be quite sufficient to gratify an ordinary ambition. cient to gratify an ordinary ambition.
